LUNATIO IN PARK LAKE.

Had Escaped From Hospital and Died as He Was Taken From the Water.

1887

James McCann, a lunatic whose illuion inspired an enfeebled body to essay athletic stunts, escaped yesterday from the sick ward on the first floor of the Long Island State Hospital at Clarkson and Albany avenues, Brooklyn, and about six hours later was pulled out the Prospect Park lake in a dying condi-tion by Mounted Policeman John Mc-McCoughlin. McCoughlin and Lieut. Hilliard of the park precinct worked over McCann until Ambulance Surgeon Vance of the Swedish Fo-pital arrived and pronounced him dea... Shortly after breakfast McCann decided Shortly after breakfast McCann decided it was time a man of the tremendous strength he thought he possessed was up and doing. He slipped through the door at the rear of the hall and swung himself down the fire escape unnoteed. Then he sprinted across the yard and serambled over the high board lence. Probably it was this false belief in a profigious strength and unparalleled agility that brought about his death.

An alarm was sent out as soon as it.

An alarm was sent out as soon as it was learned that McCann had escaped, but he strolled about Fla. bush undetected until Policeman McCoughlin saw him floundering in the lake near the first shelter house in a feeble attempt to prove his title to championship honors as a floundering in the lake near the first shelter house in a feeble attempt to prove his title to championship honors as a swimmer. McCoughlin dismounted, threw off his coat and went after the man. McCann was all in when McCoughlin reached him. Even his illusions were spent and the cop towed him out of the lake with very little difficulty. Near the bank he was met by Hilliard, who had come in answer to the mounted man's shouts and had waded in to assist in the rescue of the helpless lunatic. On shore they gave first aid until Ambulance Surgeon Vance told them it was no use.

The rescue was seen by several dozen women and children, but no one, not even the cops, thought of connecting the dead man with the escaped lunatic until his name was found in the lining of each shoe. In Flatbush a rumor had spread about a dangerous lunatic being loose and a few of the timid ones locked their doors or hovered near them with anxious eyes searching the distances.

Dr. Russell, the superintendent, said at the hospital last night that McCann was a harmless paretic and that he had many illusions, chief among which was the belief that he was a physical and financial giant, but that the disease paralyzed the muscles while upsetting the mind and in reality rendered the victim practically helpless at times.

McCann was a printer, 45 years old.

Mrs. Carroll Says City Paid Some One Else Her Money on a Forgery Mrs. Catherine McNulty Carroll asked Supreme Court Justice Giegerich vester day to direct City Chamberlain Hyde to pay her $180 due her from a partition action, which money she says some one else got by a court order in 1904 by signing her name to a petition. The names of her stephrother and stepsister were signed as witnesses, but she declared that she knew nothing about the money

until recently, and when she came for Justice Giegerich decided that there is no one Mrs. Carroll can recover from as her case now stands. The money was paid out by the late Patrick Keenan when he was City Chamberlain, but his estate is protected because he paid the money on a court order. Since the mone never came into Chamberlain Hyde
